Negative Reviews

It's a crime story fit for the digital era. It was recently reported that a number of restaurants in New York had been targeted by internet scammers threatening to leave unfavourable "one-star" reviews unless they received gift certificates.

Businesses compete for a high as possible place on the first page of Google's search results in order to capture this attention. And user feedback is one of the many parameters that influence the search engine's secret ranking algorithms.

This is because any personal bias becomes insignificant when a considerable amount of opinions is collected.

But extortion via threats of negative review is particularly insidious. A surge of negative reviews on a business's Google profile not only affects its search engine ranking, but significantly influences the potential customers' purchase decisions.

Tighter rules governing the selection of reviewers enabling their participation
