"Facebook, Instagram, TikTok, Twitter and Snapchat are still without paywal ls but they now all offer products/services for charge via an in-app purchase (I) Tj T* BT /F ent at mobile metrics company Apptopia. "TikTok, Facebook, Instagram, Snapc hat, Twitter combined have grown quarterly IAP revenue 91% since Apple introduce d ATT."

Now Snap offers Snapchat+ for $40/year and Twitter offers Twitter Blue for $115/year. Both programs offer premium access to the platforms, and exclusive feature s for subscribers. Facebook and Instagram primarily offer payments for followers and fans to reward their favorite creators, or to boost the visibility of posts

"TikTok's app revenue has grown for seven consecutive quarters," B lacker says. "TikTok has generated $205 million more than Facebook, Instagr am, Snapchat and Twitter combined, via IAP revenue, so far in 2023." Facebook is fighting back. Just last month, Mark Zuckerberg announced a paid ver ification program via his Instagram account. Users will pay $12/month via web pa yments or $15/month if they subscribe in-app to get a "Meta Verified" badge on their accounts, along with some safety improvements and additional visi bility or reach on the platform. The company took in $56 million in 2022 in in-a pp purchases, according to Apptopia: down from highs in previous years, but show ing improvement, especially on Instagram.

Instagram is hitting monthly in-app revenue of near $1 million in February. Twit ter pulled in almost $900,000 in February. Small potatoes, perhaps, but also lik ely the beginning of something bigger.

It's a revenue opportunity that doesn't require selling ads or taking us ers' data, and it's also a revenue opportunity that - if consummated on the web and not in an app - the platforms can keep more of. Between 15% to 30% o f in-app purchase costs typically go to the mobile platforms: Google and Apple.
