Jackson, 43, is currently serving a prison term for his role in a scheme to def raud the state of $50 million.

Jackson was arrested on January 10 after a federal grand jury in the Mississippi state capital of Jackson County convicted him of a money laundering offense in connection with the scheme.

Jackson said he had no knowledge of the alleged scheme in Mississippi and that t he case would not affect him in the future.

The court also asked Jackson to show up at the Mississippi State Capitol, which he said is the only place he would be present.

Jackson, who has been in prison since 2008, was convicted on charges of money la undering in connection with a scheme to defraud the state of $50 million in 2008

“I don't think it's my job to know what the laws are,” he said

“Massachusetts is one of the fastest growing cities in the United States,”

said Mike Hensley, vice president of state and local sports betting.

Massachusetts, which is the fourth state to do so, has seen a decline in the num ber of sports bets in recent years, but it has also seen an increase in betting on other sports, such as tennis, baseball, and basketball.
